[For the Dispatch, through R. A. Brock, Esq.] VIRGINIA COLONIAL GOVERNORS. BY REV. EDWARD DUFFIELD NEILL.

No. IV. Dr. John Pott, A. M., 1629-1630. THE EX-GOVERNOR, THE ONLY PHYSICIAN IN

THE COLONY, TRIED FOR CATTLE-STEALING.

After Francis West sailed for England Dr. John Pott was for one year the acting Governor. He came to Virginia with Governor Francis Wyatt, and was a man of much force of character, which created some enemies. It is supposed that he was the John Pott who received the same day as George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore, the degree of A. M. from Oxford University. On the 16th of July, 1621, Dr. Theodore Gulston, the founder of the Guistonian Lectureship in the London College of Physicians, at a meeting of the Virginia Company of London, remarked: "Forasmuch as the physician's place to the company was now become void by reason of the untimely death of Dr. Bohune, slain in the fight with the Spanish ships of war the 19th of March last, he did now take occasion to recommend unto the company for the said place one Mr. Potts, a Master of Arts, well practiced in Chirurgory and Pbysic, and expert also in distilling of waters, and that he had many other ingenious deviates "Upon this statement he was chosen Destruction great and dire.

By the instructions given in 1621, 1626, and in 1628 by the London Company no person was to be allowed to settle in Virginia unless they took the oath of allegiance and supremacy prescribed by King James. In October, 1629, George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore, came to Jamestown from his colony in Newfoundland, and wished to reside in the colony, but as he could not where, veiled by the darkening shades of night, take the whole oath, Governor Poit properly refused him the privileges of a citizen. Early in the next year Captain John Harvey arrived with a commission as Governor of The spirit of Stonewall is stirred to its depths. Virginia, and called a Legislature in the spring of 1630. Charges were preferred The spring of 1630. Charges were preferred The spring of 1630. The spring of 1630 is the spring of 1630 in the spring against Pott for detaining cattle by one Richard Kingsmell. Although the Doctor was ready to prove his accuser "a hypocrite by the story of Gusman the rogue," Harvey would not listen, and for alleged felony and for pardoning Edward Wallis, a murderer, while acting Governor, he confined him to his plantation at Harrope, seven miles from James City, near the site of Williamsburg.
The whole Council became security for Occurs, that throughout the fair South will wake Pott.* The wife of the Doctor as soon as possible crossed the Atlantic and begged for redress. A commission considered the case, and reported to the King that the condemning of Dr. Pott upon a superficial hearing "was very rigorous, if not erro-neous." A pardon was granted on the 25th of July, 1631-"especially," says the document, "as he was the only physician in the colony." After this he and his brother, Francis Pott, were prominent men-as will be seen in the sketch of Governor Harvey; † but the time of their death has not been ascertained.

*The record in Hening's Statutes of this trial is as follows: "July the 9th, 1630-Dr. John Pott. late Governor, indicted, arraigned, and found guilty late Governor, indicated, arraigned, and found guilty of stealing cattle—13 jurors, 3 whereof were councillors. This day wholly spent in pleading; next day in unnecessary disputation: Pott endeavoring to prove Mr. Kingswell lone of the witnesses against him) an hypocrite, by a story of Gusman of Alfrach the rogue. In regard of his quality and practice, judgment respited till the King's pleasure became known, and all the council became his sociative. "Vol. I., pp. 145-6.

Messrs. Editors,-1 see in the Dispatch of this morning (May 12th) that a cor-respondent desires to learn the origin of the familiar quotation "Though lost to sight, to memory dear." I think the New York Journal of Commerce is mistaken in the belief that "the author cannot be identified," as it occurs in the following lines attributed to Ruthven Jenkins, which were first published in the Greenwich Magazine R. T. D., JR. for Mariners in 1701.

Ibid, p. 196.

Lines. Sweetheart, good-bye :- that fluttering sall Is spread to waft me far from thee, And soon before the farth'ring gale My ship shall bound upon the sea:— Perchance, all des'late and forlorn. These eyes shall miss thee many a year.

But unforgotten every charm-Though tost to sight, to memory dour. Sweetheart, good-bye!—one last embrace!
O. cruel fate!—two souls to sever!
Yet in this heart's most sacred place
Thou nione shalt dwell forever;
And still shall recollection trace

In fancy's mirror-ever near-Each smile, each tear, that form, that face— Though lost to sight, to memory dear!

[We understand the Journal of Commerce to mean that the line was used as a quotation in the above poem. We cannot imagine that paper to be ignorant of the existence of the lines quoted above.]

P. S .- The above has been in type several days, but left out for want of room. Yesterday the Journal of Commerce fully confirmed our guess, as follows:

A correspondent sends us a poem by "Ruthven Jenkins," which includes the celebrated line,

Though lost to sight, to memory dear, about which we wrote the other day. We published this poem in full several years No. 1111 MAIN STREET. RICHMOND, VA ago, and rested upon it (on the authority of Notes and Queries) as to the origin of the line in question. It was said to have been published in 1701 in the Greenwich Magazine. We instructed our correspondent in Europe a few months ago to hunt up the copy in the British Museum, but he returned answer that no such publication could be found. On going back to the first issue of the answer we found that the assumed title in full was "The Greenwich Magazine for Marines," and with this nautical term the whole began to assume a very fishy odor. The English Notes and Queries copied it from a Baltimore paper, and the latter found it in a New Orleans issue, where an inventive genius is said to have prepared it. "Jenkins's" poem is good, but the line is a century older than its first appearance in that

Editors Dispatch: The writer has a copy of the second part of History of the United States (German), written by a Virginia citizen, and translated from the original French into the Germao, and printed in Leipzig in 1789. What antiquarian knows of it? Who WIEM. is the Virginia Burger?

As hydrophobia has been raging among their valued subscribers, some of the Boston papers are inclined for once to consider the convenience of human beings. The Globe says: "We have, in fact, something of a weakness for dogs, and do not like to see them severely or indiscriminately dealt with, but we have to admit that the human race is perhaps the superior."

The present Earl of Eglinton, whose father presided at a great Burns festival in 1844 and delivered an eloquent eulogium on the poet, says: "I beg to say that I have had the bad taste to neither appreciate Burns's character nor poems, so, under these circumstances, I must beg to decline subscribing towards the proposed monument at Kilmarnock."
